Midlands Farms & Food Summit Focuses on Growing & Buying Food Locally

Education, land access, farm labor and Farm to Institution programs were the hot topics at a recent Midlands Farms and Food summit. More than 100 people, from farmers to restaurant owners, farm businesses, agencies and wholesalers, spent a day brainstorming about everyone's favorite subject: food.

Organized by the Midlands Local Food Collaborative, the day-long session focused on "The Future of Midlands Farms and Food." The morning speakers addressed regional food system developments, with an overview of "Making Small Farms Big Business."

"We wanted the Midlands to learn about food hub movements emerging around South Carolina and how we fit in with plans for the rest of the state," explained Katie Welborn, community organizer for the Midlands Food Collaborative. "Our goal was to determine what we want to work on here." She added that the collaborative is a network of organizations that work with farmers on a regular basis.

At lunchtime, the group divided into 15 tables, each of which zeroed in on key subjects of interest. The question was: "What do you want the Midlands food system to look like in 10 years?"

Hands-on Experiences Make Learning Fun

It's always rewarding for me to see the younger generation get excited about agriculture, and the South Carolina Commissioner's School for Agriculture provides that opportunity each summer.

This year, 37 exceptional high school juniors and seniors from South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia spent a week of their summer attending this academic program at Clemson University. Commissioner's School gave these students an inside look at various college majors and related career options in agriculture and natural resources. Throughout the week, this group took part in academic projects, field tours and laboratory exercises, all while gaining skills in leadership and professional development.

The week started with a stream assessment at Wildcat Creek in Clemson's Experimental Forest. The students spent time gathering samples in the creek before bringing them up to the pavilion to evaluate and identify what they had found. They had a variety of findings, from salamanders and crawfish to dragonfly nymphs and spiders. Before returning everything back to the creek, the students filled out an assessment work sheet to determine water quality.

Before attending Commissioner's School, the students had selected Plant and Soil Science, Natural Resources, or Animal Science as their academic track.

They spent two days during the week learning more about their chosen field. The Plant and Soil Science group spent one morning at Clemson University’s Musser Fruit Research Farm. They learned about Musser Farm’s breeding program and how researchers there have developed varieties of peaches with improved resistance to disease and environmental stress.

It was all about aquaculture and aquaponics one morning for the Natural Resources group. Dr. Lance Beecher toured the students through Clemson’s rooftop aquaculture facility, where he explained the mechanics of the aquaponics system. Researchers there are raising tilapia and growing lettuce, and Dr. Beecher explained how they benefit one another.

The Animal Science academic track spent an afternoon with Dr. Mickey Hall learning about sausage production, and they actually made two types of chicken sausage. This is always a favorite session and the entire group enjoyed the prepared sausage for breakfast the next morning.

As a reward for their hard work in academics, the students spent a day white water rafting down the wild and scenic Chattooga River in Long Creek. The weather was perfect for this six-hour expedition, the highlight of which was surviving the Class 4 rapid called Bull Sluice.

I enjoyed meeting all of this year’s participants and their families during the closing reception. It is always a pleasure to present each student with a Certificate of Completion and hear how rewarding the school was for each of them. What a great way to end such a successful week!

Not only is it important to prepare the next generation of South Carolina’s future agribusiness leaders, but it is our responsibility to help make that happen. This program is designed to educate students on all career options in agriculture. I have been tremendously pleased with the overall success of the Commissioner’s School. Since 2004, we have graduated more than 350 students. Some of the alumni are working in turf grass management for Augusta National Golf Course, some are in packaging science for Frito Lay, and others are earning their PhDs in tobacco research. Several have returned to their family farms--which helps complete the cycle of farming.

Candace Gibby, Jessica Egan, and Leigh Fleming searched for wildlife in the water during the stream assessment.

The South Carolina Commissioner’s School for Agriculture wouldn’t be possible without the partnership between the SC Department of Agriculture and Clemson University’s College of Agriculture, Forestry and Life Sciences. Look for applications for next year’s program in January 2015.

Garrison Smith shows some of the creepy-crawlies he pulled from Wildcat Creek. The creatures were identified and then released.

Agritourism Is Big Business!

South Carolina has a number of agritourism venues. We will be featuring three in each issue of the Market Bulletin: one in the Upstate, one in the Midlands, and one in the Lowcountry. To find out more about this exciting industry, contact agritourism director Jackie Moore at jmoore@scda.sc.gov.

138-acre working U-Pick farm featuring fresh produce, view of hills, vineyards, orchards and berry patches near the Blue Ridge Mountains. A dozen U-pick fruits, their own brand of wine, grass fed Angus beef, an 18-hole disc golf course, a cabin on Horseshoe Lake, observation circle for astronomers, and a large event barn used for weddings.

Store open 9-5 every day April through October with SC Grown and Certified products. Lunch served every day 11-2.

A family farm that produces cotton, grain, and a wide variety of fresh fruits and vegetables. Available now: white and yellow peaches, tomatoes, cabbage, squash, watermelons, cantaloupes, peppers, eggplant, zucchini. Sold direct from the farm wholesale and at two retail locations: The Market in Lowrys or The Chester Market. Fresh-ground white cornmeal and grits. School field trips welcome. Farm tours every Saturday in October.

Established in 1725 and rich in tradition and history, Legare Farms is a bustling 300-acre farm on the Stono River near Charleston. Healthy, locally grown products from our farm to your table. Fresh, all-natural foods, chemical-free beef, pork and chicken products, salsa, pickles, jams, fresh eggs. Unique family events, hayrides, birthday parties, private events, picnics, weddings. Sept. 13 Cow Pie Skip. Closed on Sundays.

Farms & Food Summit

“Each table brainstormed down to one subject,” Welborn continued. “All attendees then voted on the one they thought was most important for the Midlands.” The winner was education, particularly in the schools. Where food comes from, teaching people how to farm, and whether schools can assist in farm-related careers were all discussed.

Farm labor was another topic, sparking questions such as: Is there a labor force in South Carolina that knows how to harvest and pack fresh produce, and how to grow food for direct human consumption? How many farmers would hire more labor if the workforce were available?

An interesting, and somewhat surprising, topic was that of land access. People want to work with land trusts, and with farmers who have land. Discussion on how to match new farmers with farmable land in the area resulted in a variety of possibilities.

The Farm to School program, which connects local farms with school districts so that kids can eat fresh local food, was another major point. The even broader Farm to Institution program involves local hospitals and prisons.

“If we work on leveraging food-purchasing organizations to demand locally sourced foods and then connect distributors with farmers, we will see a positive response to this demand,” Welborn said. They are already working to connect local farmers with a food hub in Orangeburg.

The results of a Midlands farm survey conducted by the collaborative will be published next month. Other than “word of mouth,” the survey found that Certified SC Grown is the Number 1 way that Midlands farmers market themselves.

“The Certified SC branding and online database is huge for farmers in our state,” Welborn said.
